

Dear Commissioner,

The current net neutrality rules are working well, and certainly haven't interfered with the phone companies' profits. Revamping these rules can only lead to a two-tiered internet or fast lane for those who can pay for it and a dirt road for those who cannot.

The Internet is a service that many consumers rely upon for commerce, communications, information, education, health and safety. It is as important as water or electricity and has become a staple of our lives and the economy. Title II classification is essential to ensure that all Internet content providers, innovators and consumers are treated equally, without unreasonable discrimination.

ISPs, especially those who control the networks necessary for both content providers and customers to access the Internet should not be permitted to act as "gatekeepers" deciding which content and users take precedence over others.

Don't throw away net neutrality, keep the internet free!
Thank you for your attention to this issue.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Matt Lavine', with a stylized flourish at the end.

Matt Lavine